DEATH.

At Chelmsford, 29th June, MARY EMILY, eldest daughter of JOHN and EMILY ELIZABETH WATSON, aged 16 years.

The Daily Press.

HONGKONG, JULY 1st, 1892.

The fatal accident which occurred yesterday morning on the Peak Tramway is much to be deplored. The sufferers by it were coolies engaged in repairing the track near the junction where the cars meet; the author of the disaster was the Chinese pointerman, who moved the switch the wrong way. The act was pure and simple carelessness; the man had performed the same duty for a considerable time, we understand, and knew the work as thoroughly as routine work of the kind can be known by constant practice. For some reason unknown, he deferred the operation until the last moment, and in his hurry may have become flurried. Whether he has any excuse to offer for his betrayal of trust will perhaps be learned later on, if he is apprehended, for it seems he quietly absconded directly after the appalling consequences of his negligence became apparent. One poor fellow, whose leg was severed by the cable, expired soon after the accident; and two others are seriously injured. The only wonder is that so few lives were lost and so little damage done. The damage indeed was but trifling, and but for the presence of the coolies on the track executing repairs no one would have even been injured. These facts are of a most reassuring character. The accident instead of creating alarm will tend to inspire confidence in the Tramway. On the steeper portion of the line, where the cars pass, the pointerman moves the wrong switch, yet there is neither a collision, a smash-up, nor an upset. The reasons are not far to seek. The telegram was sent in motion instantly and the cars stopped. One of them got slightly derailed, but sustained no damage, and no one on board received any injury. The breaks act perfectly, and dangerous as the car is it is without watch of any sort.

The P. M. steamer Claire, with gall, to left San Francisco for this port via Yokohama or the Chin instant.

The O. P. steamer Empress of India, from Hongkong, arrived at Shanghai at 12.30 p.m. on Tuesday, and sailed again at midnight for Vancouver via Nagasaki, Kobe, and Yokohama.

Information to the effect that Mr. Vein, Vice Consul of the United States, says that negotiations for his release are proceeding, but it is not clear what time before he is set at liberty, or nothing important has been decided. It may well be understood, why reserve is maintained with regard to the negotiations going on between Mr. Vein and Luna-kye; when the life of a nation is at stake it is not prudent to comment upon the events every day.

A correspondent of the New York Sun, writing from San Francisco on the 21st May, says: Among the passengers on the Empress of India, which arrived last from the United States, was Mr. Vein, Vice Consul, and his wife and child. They were about the only persons on the steamer who didn't enjoy the voyage. The ladies criticised Mrs. Hetherington, and the men tolerated the presence of Hetherington. When the ship was docked the Lieutenant was in a rage. If any man had the temerity of a lady to speak to him in the living room, he became violently profane, regardless of the presence of ladies. On the dock several persons went up to Hetherington and offered assistance, but were met with "Mind your own business." Hetherington is tall, square, and looks more like a farmer than a naval officer. His hair is grey, and his eyes are blue. After getting ashore, he became violently profane, regardless of the presence of ladies. CHINA NOTES.

14th June.

Some of the foreigners in the province are doing considerable missionary work this season in making the Chinese familiar with the presence of the pith hat. When any one appears on the street with his head thus usefully decorated, astonishment of the natives is simply unfeigned. It makes the latter the pit hat is the only portion of the attire that is yet worn here in a public way, and if the size of the hats taken into consideration, it would be hardly proper to speak of the foreigners who thus array themselves as getting in the "thin end of the wedge" of foreign customs.

In view of the recent anti-Chinese legislation in the United States, the Americans here are asking, "What is it going to affect them?" Will the Chinese Government drive them out? It is not likely. To do so would be to afford an opportunity to the Chinese authorities to speak of the foreigners who thus array themselves as getting in the "thin end of the wedge" of foreign customs.

The Official Gazette of last night contains a proclamation of the dissolution. The new Parliament is summoned to meet on August 4th.

It is difficult for a westerner to realize how the poorer people in a country like this make out any sort of a living. A man who is not in a dry goods store, and who has few persons dependent upon him, may indeed afford the writer that his total expenses for 15,000 cash per year, or a little more, each day for his own wants, hands are glad to get employment at fifty cash per day and a bowl or two of rice. The regular rate for carriers is fifty cash, with food, and an allowance for expenses of twenty. In the other foreigner's can hire servants for 176 to 220 cash per day. If the wages, the cost of labour is still less than in cities, but village labourers are even lower than city workers.

In counting cash, the hundred cash, fall At Tsin-pan, 80; 80 count a hundred at Tai-pan, it is 97, while in the larger towns Tai-pan is only 93. At Fung-ho, it is 95, but 99, but the town does not receive the full count.

The Chinese magistrates are not thought of as being able to keep himself in behalf of the two men who did the robbing have been arrested, and one of them is still awaiting trial, but no record has been made to secure the restoration of the stolen goods. The magistrates, however, issued a stamped copy of the imperial proclamation to the missionary in charge so as to ensure protection in the future.

A wealthy Chinese at Tsin-pan is remodelling his house somewhat after a foreign pattern. He is at last determined to fit in properly, like as the paces of glass in the windows, and to be four stories, the three feet large. It is reported that the Lingkang Hsien was nearly destroyed by a mob who had appealed in vain to the magistrates for food. Rumours of unrest among the people are quite common. #### NOTES FROM CHINESE NATIVE PAPERS.

In the middle of last month the brigands who are robbing here in Tsin-pan committed a most daring act. To show that they went to the stable where Li Li kept his horses, and took out his horses away with them. It is now believed that the thief had been captured, but the thief is still at large, though the authorities are trying every effort to effect his capture.

A terrible fire prevailed over Tsin-pan and the surrounding country on the 22nd ultmo, causing considerable damage to boats and the loss of several lives. The casualties, so far as could be ascertained, do not go beyond the capsizing of a few light barge skiffs and the drowning of some of the occupants, yet from the way the tempest was raging, it is presumed other places must have also suffered, though we have no intelligence yet to that effect.

In the country south-west of Tsin-pan there is a hill called the Yen-ping Shan, on the top of which stands a temple occupied by Buddhist monks. A short time ago a foreigner went to the place, having made a careful survey of everything, and enquired of a monk whether they would lose the place to him. The priest replied that with the town and its related to them who had passed before himself and the foreigner, who were then discussing what motive the foreigner had in wanting to live in such a desolate spot, jointly petitioned the officials to have the place examined. A few able-bodied men were forthwith despatched to the spot designated, and to inspect the place. After a careful examination they pronounced that the hill was full of "white salts" and that the veins seemed with that metal.

A philanthropist in Ningpo is taking measures to erect a mortuary for friendless travellers who are suddenly exposed to a starved sleep on steamer, and who die without friends or relatives. Hitherto the bodies of people who die on board ship are carried to the nearest convenient spot, where they are left exposed to the sun and rain, waiting for identification or failing this, to be buried in the same of the occupants, yet from the way the tempest was raging, it is presumed other places must have also suffered, though we have no intelligence yet to that effect.

The principal chief of the band of notorious freebooters known as the terrible Wang King-men, were captured a short time ago near Ningpo. The bandit chief was said to have been looking for the pirates, who had been looking for him. The bandit chief was also said to be taken, hence a plot was reported. The soldiers, disguised as merchants, set out in a juncture of the regions which the pirates had been accustomed to visit, and, after the latter to take the bandit. Ease of prey the pirates soon found them, when a fight ensued, and resulted in the capture of a certain number of the bandit chief.
